Stories of big "finds" of gold reach us not only from the Klondike, but from many parts of the country not hitherto suspected of being veined by the preclous metal. A tremendous impetus to mining industry and the development by syndicates of capitalists of natural wealth in numerous directions has re-sulted. The exposure and hardships of frontier miners have ever been produc-tive of rheumatism, one of the most obstinate and agonizing of complaints. As a means of amellorating and preventing a means of ameliorating and preventing this malady. Hostetter's Stomach Bit-ters is unequalled. The action of this fine medicine is also speedily felt in cases of malaria, dyspeptic and kidney and bladder complaints. Lumbago and other infirmities incident to advancing years are also counteracted by it.

A CORK LEGGED MAN.

BY CHARLES B. LEWIS.

Of the six passengers who alighted from the stage coach at the Acorn inn, in Blissfield, one April evening was a man with a wooden leg. That sort of a misfortune is not rare, and yet the victim, especially in a country town, always attracts considerable attention. The stranger registered as John Gordan of Chicago, and when he gave out that he might remain in Blissfield for several weeks everybody wondered what business could have brought him there.

"The man with the wooden leg," as he came to be generally spoken of, had been in town about a week, when one of the leading merchants was robbed of about $1,000 in cash. He had the money in an old fashioned safe, which opened with a key, and the safe had the trousers hanging on the chair. been unlocked. Entrance to the store market. He has been in the drug busi- had been effected by way of the fanlight ness at Elkton, Ky., for 12 years, has over the front doors. No suspicious sold hundreds of bottles of this remedy characters had been seen about the town, and as the merchant and his son were the only ones having keys to the safe the affair was a puzzle. The local constable did a great deal of talking, but struck no clew, and in his desperation he asked Gordan to assist him, believing, no doubt, that a government officer of any sort ought to be more or less posted in detective work. Gordan seemed to think the matter over for awhile and then replied:

"The case is as plain as the nose on your face. The merchant's son took the money, and after this thing quiets down he will go off to St. Louis to have a good time. I'd stake my life he's got every dollar of the missing cash secure ly hidden away somewhere." The constable couldn't believe it of the young man, having known him-from childhood, but he was bound by a promise not to mention the matter, and after several theories had been worked out and exploded the matter was allowed to drop, or, rather, it was relegated for presence of the sheriff he said: another sensation. Seven or eight days after the store robbery the postoffice was entered. That, too, had an old fashioned safe, but it held something like $2,000. Of this sum about $500 belonged to the postmaster, the balance to the

The lock on the back door was bored off with a brace and bit taken from a carpenter's shop, and this safe was also opened by means of a false key. The excitement in that small town was inense, and men tumbled over each other to advance theories and suggestions. ter and his assistant could prove them-selves clear. The general idea was that the burglars had driven into the village more than one or two doses to cure the of a farmer as to having seen a buggy with two men in it pass his house twice that night. He saw nothing of the sort, but told the story from a desire to "mix in" and furnish a clew. The sheriff rode all over the county in search of his men, but the days passed and no one was arrested. No one had advanced the theory that the robber was living among us, and if any one had he would have been laughed at for his words. Gordan, the government agent, was the only stranger in town, and who could suspect him? He had little to say about either job, but when pressed for an opinion on the postoffice affair he re-

"Gentlemen, my line is not detective work, though I have seen a good deal of it and know something about criminals. Whoever did that job come from a distance. There was likely two of them. They may have come 50 miles for all we know, but you can bet they were old

It was decided that the robbery had been committed by strangers, and after a search lasting three or four days the officers gave it up. It was a big loss to the postmaster and several citizens, but they had to bear it the best way they could. The postmaster was an old man and had little of this world's goods, and Gordan offered to be one of the ten to chip in $50 and make good his loss. The other nine did not come forward, but everybody in town said it was more than kind of the man with a wooden leg, and a dozen cy more of the most prominent men shook hands with him over it. Ten or 12 days passed, and then came a terrible tragedy.

The richest man in Blissfield was Squire Higgins. He owned the woolen Squire Higgins. He owned the woolen mills, a store and several houses and had money to lend. He was a widower, but lived with his son and daughter-in-law. His room was on the ground floor, while all the others slept up stairs. He had no safe, but kept his money in a tin box on a shelf in a closet. He had a bank account over at Medina, ten miles away, but often had $1,000 dollars or more in the house. One evening when more in the house. One evening when the others were ready to go to bed he announced that he had some business to stand to and was seated at his deak in

down to investigate the squire was found dead on the floor, having been stabbed no less than five times in the House and grounds were searched, but the murderer had escaped, and he had also taken with him the cash box, which contained about $700. The murder had taken place in the bedroom. Having finished his work, the squire had retired to bed and had perhaps fallen asleep. Some noise made by the murderer as he hunted for the cash box had aroused him, and he had sprung out of bed and grappled with the unknown. Any one of the stabs would have disabled him, but it appeared that the midnight intruder had held on to him and used the knife again and again, as if he thirsted for blood. When I heard men speak of this next day, the cruel eyes and thin lips of the man with the wooden leg was the next thought. Boy that I was, he seemed to be a man who would do just that thing, and I found myself wondering if he was not the guilty party in all three instances. Gordan seemed to take a lively interest in the murder, which he promptly declared to be the work of strangers again. When something was said about getting a detective, he opposed the project on various grounds, in which he was backed by the local officers. No outside help would have been called in. and the murderer might have gone his way but for the arrival of another stranger. He was, as it happened, a first class detective, who was just then employed in tracing a missing man. The crime was a day old when he reached Blissfield. He heard all the particulars from the loungers at the inn and then volunteered to look the ground over.

This was a courtesy on his part which the sheriff could not refuse, and after supper he was taken to the house. I did not see much of his work, but it was talked about for long months afterward. The murderer had got in by a parlor window, which was six feet from the ground. He had used a chisel to force up the sash. He had lighted three or four matches in making his way into the sitting room. He had gone out by the same window, crossed a newly made garden and climbed a fence. He had used a regular dagger instead of a knife in his work. He had secured the box before the old man was aroused and had also taken a small sum of money from

The tracks in the garden were still fresh when the detective took hold of the work, and in three minutes he had made up his mind to something. He had little to say to any of the men, explaining that he had not yet completed his investigations, but as he left the house to return to the inn, while I followed at a respectful distance, he turned down a quiet lane, beckoned me to follow, and when we were alone he lighted his pipe and asked:

"Boy, do you know any man in town who is lame in the left leg?" I did not. Then he asked if any stranger who was lame had been seen in town during the last two or three days. I answered in the negative, but added that there was a man with a wooden leg at the iun. He at once began to question me about this man, not yet having seen him himself, and I told him all I knew and all I had heard. Of course he told me nothing in return, though I heard him chuckling to himself, and his face betraved the fact that he was pleased about something. I acted

"I want you to go with me to overui the ma the tavern." "But he can't have done it." protest ed the officer. "The tracks you found showed that the murderer had two feet." "Just so, and he was lame in the left

"But this man Gordan has lost his

"I want to see if he has." The sheriff, detective and constable, with two or three citizens, proceeded to the inn and to Gordan's room. He sat smoking and reading and had his supper brought up to him that night, claiming to be suffering with neuralgia. He was cool and quiet and offered cigars all around, but those who were watching him saw him grow pale as the sheriff began by begging his pardon and hoped no offense would be taken, but would he let them look at his wooden leg?

Gordan faltered and bluffed and was reaching for a pistol under his pillow when the detective seized him. He fought like a demon and it took the five or six men to overcome him. When they had him securely bound, they unstrapped his wooden leg, and, lo, his left foot was there as right as any man's. His leg was a supple one, and he had bent the lower portion back and strapped it thus and then put his knee in the crotch of the wooden leg. Of all those who had taken a look at his leg not one had suspected the cheat. Yes, he was the man who had robbed the merchant and the postmaster, and he was also the murderer of Squire Higgins. The plunder and the dagger were found in his trunk, which he had ready packed, as he was intending to leave town next day. He simply laid his wooden leg as/de when he went out at night. The wearing of it gave him a sort of halt when it was removed, and as he crossed the garden after the mur-der the left foot pressed the ground more lightly than the right. On the evidence worked up by the detective in a couple of hours' time Gordan was tried, convicted and hung, and every dollar of the stolen money went back to the rightdungeon, could not well be imagined. There are thousands of mothers and their babes who lie shackled by disease in the dungeon of death.

Without knowing it, or having the faintest comprehension of it, the fault lies with the mother. Too many women enter upon the responsibilities of wifehood and motherhood while suffering from weakness and disease of the delicate and important organs that make wifehood and motherhood possible. A woman who suffers in this way cannot be a capable wife and a competent mother. Before entering upon the duties and responsibilities of these positions, she should see to it that her health, both general and local, is thoroughly restored. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the best of all medicines for this purpose. It acts directly on the sensitive organs concerned, making them strong, healthy and vigorous. It promotes regularity of the functions allays irritation and inflammation, heals ulceration, checks unnatural and exhausting drains and soothes pain. It tones and builds up the shattered nerves. It turns the dangers and pains of maternity into safety and case. It is a medicine that is builds up the shattered nerves. It ture the dangers and pains of maternity in safety and ease. It is a medicine that intended for this one purpose only and good for no other. Dealers sell it and homest dealer will suggest a substitute.
